TALK A CONVERSATION WITH KAITLYN & AMY BRAGDON-ROE

"Peaks is a wonderful place to be a family. If your first focus in life is family life, then this is the place to be."

Last May, Kaitlyn and Amy Bragdon-Roe moved to Peaks Island with their son, Chandler, now three years old. Kaitlyn and Amy met in San Francisco, where they also met Chandler's biological father, Paul Theisen. The family migrated to Maine, Amy's home state, searching for a home in a community that would be welcoming. They found it on Peaks Island.

Can you tell me about your relationship as three adults raising a child?

Kaitlyn: Amy and I were trying to get pregnant, and we were paying a lot of money for sperm. I mean a minuscule 1 or 2 cc of sperm cost $110, not counting if we had to have it intrauterine — or the ice. Amy and I had been clean and sober for a long time, and this was very much like scoring drugs. 'Oh, we're ovulating today! Gotta whip out the cooler and run to the store — buy the sperm — get to the house and do that thing.' It was very disconcerting for us. Then our friend Paul said, 'God, I can give it to you for free.' We thought Paul was joking. Then we called him up a few days later, and asked him if he was serious. He said, 'Let me think about it.' He thought about it for a while, and he said, 'Yes, I am serious. You are the only two people I can imagine doing this for. I will give you a gift.' And the gift is waltzing through the house.

Amy: What I think Paul didn't know is how much he would love Chandler, and how connected he would feel to him. Paul is a very sensitive, loving man, and while he believed, he had no idea of the gift he was giving himself. What has grown is really remarkable. Paul has a very cool relationship with Chandler. Paul is in no way required to send money or support us. He comes to visit us as often as he can. It's that kind of thing. But what he has found is that this creature is just the most amazing thing.

Children don't get bogged down in the issues that divide adults. What happens to us?

Kaitlyn: Children of a young age can be racist and unwilling to mesh if their parents are. If we behave as if our families are normal, our children will too. I doubt there are many people on this island who would see us as abnormal, but some probably tell their children, 'They're not normal.'

You have many friends here, heterosexuals included.

Amy: The bonding between other mothers and myself is much stronger than any of my bonds with other lesbians.

Darker days

When it comes to campaign themes, both Republican gubernatorial nominee Jim Longley and Democratic candidate Tom Connolly rank right up there with the greats. The great losers, that is.

"Income disparity and poverty in Maine are increasing," said Connolly.

"I think Maine has become seriously out of touch with the economic realities in the country," said Longley.

Uplifting stuff. At least it was uplifting enough to carry Connolly and Longley to easy victories in their respective primaries. But that was over opponents who were either 1) weak, 2) wacky or 3) both. When it comes to the general election campaigns, spending all their time and energy making a big stink about an economy that's doing pretty well by most people may leave a little something to be desired. That's because members of the public love to gripe among themselves, but they rarely tolerate such behavior from candidates — even when it's justified.

Take, for example, the Jimmy Carter campaign of 1980. With the public weary of high inflation and high unemployment, the incumbent Democratic president announced the country was plagued by a national "malaise." His opponent, Republican Ronald Reagan, talked about "morning in America."

Or how about Joe Brennan's 1990 gubernatorial bid. Democrat Brennan was dead on target when he claimed the state faced a devastating economic downturn if Republican Gov. John McKernan were to win another term. But McKernan pointed to the boom years of the 1980s, and promised more of the same.

When the votes were counted, Carter was sent off to build houses for charity, and Brennan was relegated to sitting in the waiting room outside Bill Clinton's office in case any ambassadorships opened up.

History has shown that the average person wants a candidate with a positive message. For instance, many successful politicians have employed the statement, "If you vote for me, I will give you money" to produce excellent results. Other useful methods involve promising potential supporters sex, drugs or satellite technology. There are indications that these campaign strategies may not adhere to the strictest interpretations of the applicable statutes, but an investigation could take many years, by which time the elected official might be living comfortably in a country with arcane extradition policies.

Incumbent independent Gov. Angus King seems to grasp this subtle point (about having a positive message, I mean, not avoiding extradition). Instead of carping about the impending $400 million budget shortfall, King is more likely to mention the state's low unemployment rate, increased personal income, rising number of jobs and glowing assessments from bond-rating agencies. He can tout Moody's Investor Services, which recently praised Maine for "prudent financial management and spending discipline" and "an increased pace of economic recovery," or he can mention Standard & Poor's, which lauded the state's "diversifying economy," its "improving financial performance" and "low debt burden with a rapid amortization schedule."

While amortization schedules may not be the most fascinating material on which to base 30-second TV spots, they beat the hell out of Longley's laments and Connolly's complaints.

"Maine isn't going anywhere," the GOP standard-bearer griped to the Bangor Daily News the week before the election. "If we're going anywhere, we're going backwards."

"[King has] made the life of my people worse in the last four years," the Democratic choice whined to WCSH-TV on election night. "There's a lot of suffering in the state."

What both candidates need is to balance their calls for change with some optimism. Because if the public were interested in disaster, they'd have chosen Carter and Brennan. And if they were really interested, they'd have voted for Joe Ricci.

politics and other mistakes

■ AL DIAMON

Talk dirty to me

The Democratic gubernatorial debate aired June 1 on WCSH-TV looked like a live event, but what viewers were actually watching was a tape running seven seconds behind reality. A Channel 6 insider confided that the station made the decision in order to allow itself time to bleep out any obscenities uttered by candidate Joe Ricci, who had demonstrated a propensity throughout the campaign for uttering words not normally employed in the dry rituals of public political discourse.

But WCSH news director Mike Curry, apparently concerned the station might appear biased against Ricci, refused to confirm the reason for the taping. "It's not that unusual," Curry claimed. "We put a lot of live interaction shows on tape delay."

Did Channel 6 use a similar delay for the June 3 congressional debate between David Ott and Ross Connolly?

"No." What other recent events were tape-delayed? "I can't give an example of another time."

Damn. I mean damn.

According to H.L. Mencken, the businessman "is the only man above the hangman and the scavenger who is forever apologizing for his occupation. He is the only one who always seeks to make it appear, when he obtains the object of his labors, i.e., the making of a great deal of money, that it was not the object of his labors." Which makes about as much sense as the statistics gathered here. Join the idiocy by contacting this column care of CBW, 561 Congress St., Portland, ME 04101, or e-mail editor@cbw.maine.com.

It comes down to who you believe — the NAACP or Portland police. Or possibly none of the above. On May 25, the cops stopped two Sudanese boys, ages 15 and 17, on Cumberland Avenue. According to the NAACP, the cops forced one of the boys to the sidewalk and told him, "Welcome to America, nigger."

news-orama

The names of the officers and the boys have not been released, and the reason the boys were stopped is a mystery. But Chief Mike Chitwood confirmed an internal investigation is under way. "We haven't been able to talk to the kids," said Chitwood, "so I don't know what's going on." Meanwhile, the NAACP issued a news release claiming, "Police have intensified its [sic] hunt for African-American youth, for reasons that are very unclear to the Black community." At a demonstration on June 8, NAACP leaders demanded a state or federal inquiry. "Rattlesnakes don't usually bite themselves," said Mike Stovall, the lawyer for the boys. "We're hoping [the police are] fair, but we're not holding our breath."

■ Can you believe the U.S. Postal Service? Even though the Portland City Council has begun the process of taking land near Rand Road by eminent domain, the USPS still plans to build its huge processing center there. To head off the city, the service hastily concluded negotiations with the owner of the site. It's now unclear how — or even if — the 300,000-square-foot development (next to a nature preserve) can be stopped.

■ You might not want to trust Cumberland County's government either. County officials neglected to tell anyone, including their own budget committee, that they'd squirreled away more than $1.8 million to build new office space. That space will likely go on top of the courthouse parking garage in Portland. Municipal officials are angry the extra money wasn't used to reduce property taxes. And somebody might want to ask the budget committee — made up of many of those same municipal officials — if they were awake when all this slipped by them.

■ In other unbelievable news, Amtrak and Guilford Rail System have settled their dispute over track fees and insurance, which means passenger train service between Portland and Boston will start in late 1999. The problems at Reiche School in Portland's West End are over, now that a new principal has been hired. Kenneth Kunin, who headed a Massachusetts school for kids with emotional and learning disabilities, will take over the dysfunctional institution in July. And everything is just dandy at Jackson Brook Institute, where Quorum Health Resources of Tennessee has been hired to operate the private psychiatric hospital in South Portland. The search for a new owner for the bankrupt facility ($7 million in debts) continues. CBW

CITY

The mighty and the fallen

A mixture of blowouts and nailbiters in June 9 vote

■ KIMBERLY JEAN SMITH

Republicans have little hope of winning key State House seats in Portland this fall as candidates put June 9 primaries behind them and gear up for the November elections. But it's area Democrats who may be reeling from primary races that pitted popular incumbents against well-liked opponents.

Out of 660 votes, a mere 12 ballots separated victorious Democratic legislative candidate John McDonough — who just completed a term as a Portland city councilor — and his opponent Richard Farnsworth, the incumbent in the House district that covers the Western Prom, Libbytown and Stroudwater in Portland. Soon after unofficial results were announced June 9, Farnsworth said he would consider demanding a recount.

"We are going to look at our options," Farnsworth said. "Yeah, I really felt like I had strong support in my district." McDonough could not be reached for comment before presstime.

In the House seat encompassing Portland's Parkside and Bayside neighborhoods, legislative incumbent Michael Quint easily prevailed over his popular opponent, Herb Adams, who held the seat until term limits forced him out in 1996 after eight years of service. Unofficial results showed Quint won 59 percent of a total of 570 votes. Adams will maintain his seat on Portland's School Committee, a position he gained in 1997. Quint will likely face no Republican challenger in the fall. Neither candidate could be reached before presstime.

Even as Democratic incumbent Peggy Pendleton was winning the right to defend her Senate seat — covering Saco, Dayton, Old Orchard Beach and parts of Buxton and Scarborough — her Republican husband, Robert Pendleton, was losing his chance to again represent the district covering parts of Scarborough and Gorham in the House. Peggy Pendleton prevailed over her opponent, Arthur St. Hilaire, by 534 votes out of a total of 2,998. She'll face Republican Theodore Poirier come November. Poirier easily won over Steven Ciembroniewicz, polling 496 votes out of a total of 1,504. Results in both races were unofficial.

Incumbent Robert Pendleton lost to Harold Clough, a political newcomer, by 217 votes after 525 were cast. "I wasn't surprised at all when I saw the turnout," said Robert Pendleton, who said his supporters took a win for granted and never made it to the polls. Clough, who has no opponent in the fall race and therefore is virtually guaranteed a seat in Augusta, said he is looking forward to serving the community.

In the race for the House seat representing Munjoy Hill, the Casco Bay islands and part of East Deering in Portland, Democratic newcomer Benjamin Dudley won 68 percent of a total 783 votes. His opponent Martin Joyce captured 23 percent of the vote, while a third opponent, Robert Griffin, earned just 8 percent. Dudley will face Green Party candidate Elizabeth Marsano come November.

In House District 42, which covers North Yarmouth and parts of Cumberland, Terrence McKenney defeated Carl McPherson in unofficial results. McKenney won by just 38 votes out of a total of 976.

In House District 31, which covers Portland's West End, Mike Saxl, who ran unopposed in the primary, will face independent candidate Ben Meiklejohn this fall.

In House District 36, which is made up of parts of Deering, Elizabeth Townsend, who ran unopposed in the primary, will face Mark Cenci, a Libertarian, this fall.

In the race for governor, Thomas Connolly left Bill Lemke and Joseph Ricci far behind in the Democratic primary. Connolly earned 81 percent of the vote, according to unofficial results, while Ricci won just 19 percent and Lemke, a write-in candidate, barely registered at the polls. Connolly's Republican opponent will be James Longley, whose unofficial 64 percent win at the polls easily bested Henry Joy and Leo Martin. Joy earned 22 percent and Martin 14 percent in tallies that included most but not all precincts. Connolly and Longley will face independent Gov. Angus King this fall.

In the Republican congressional primary for the 1st District, Ross Connelly eked out a win. With almost all precincts reporting by presstime, Connelly appeared to have slipped by his opponent, David Ott, with 52 percent of the vote. He'll face Democratic incumbent Tom Allen, a former Portland city councilor, this fall.

Voters approved all three bond issues on the ballot, electing to borrow money for improved transportation infrastructure, better water pollution control facilities and updated vocational high schools.

Local TV

Cash infusion

Portland's community station gets a financial boost

Viewers of Portland's public access TV station may soon notice something different about Channel 2 — better shows, and more of them.

Thanks to a substantial cash infusion from Time Warner Cable and the City Council, the channel will be able to upgrade editing machines and feature more programming. Station manager Tom Handel plans to use part of the $161,000 to buy equipment that will allow Channel 2 to air shows around the clock, even when broadcast engineers aren't present. In a typical week, the station now offers just 10 hours of programming and fills the remaining time with an automated public-service bulletin board. But with the new setup, Handel said, "we can go on as many days a week as we want to. That's a biggie. It means we can get more programs on."

The additional money for Channel 2 comes from three sources. Time Warner is kicking in $75,000 in exchange for an underutilized mobile production van that Channel 2 has long wanted to trade in. Time Warner will also spend $40,000 from a reserve fund set up for public access when the company signed its franchise agreement with the city in 1986, and contribute an additional $21,000. And the Council included $25,000 for Channel 2's operating expenses in the city's latest budget, the first time it has made such an allocation. The rest of Channel 2's yearly budget comes from Portland cable customers, whose monthly bills include a nominal fee for community access. Overall, the station's annual budget — now $75,000 — is 50 percent higher than last year.

Handel said public interest in production classes at the station has also grown in recent months, a development he hopes will lead to more locally created shows (see "Channel serf," 2.26.98). The cash infusion, he said, will help provide decent equipment and facilities for the new videographers and pay the rent on the station's new space at 100 Oak St. "It's almost a dream come true to have [public access] increase its budget by $25,000," he said.

Strapped for cash

YouthBuild scrambles to replace lost funding

Federal housing officials have decided not to renew financial support for YouthBuild, a program that teaches construction and academic skills to troubled young people in Portland. Ethan Strimling, executive director of the Portland West Neighborhood Planning Council, the nonprofit that runs YouthBuild, said that because of lost funding he must cut the number of students next year from 50 to 12. Strimling said he is also laying off seven staff members, two of whom may eventually be rehired.

YouthBuild previously won three annual grants from the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD), but its latest application, for $695,505, was denied in October. Strimling said HUD officials unfairly considered the total amount of outside contributions each program received, without factoring in the population of each program's urban area. According to his calculation, Portland's YouthBuild would have needed to raise $15.84 per resident to match New York City's program, which would need a mere 14¢ per capita. "[T]his discriminates against small cities," Strimling said. "Three hundred thousand dollars for Portland is huge. A million dollars for New York City is nothing."

"We're sort of hunkering down. We're using money wisely and looking for other sources." — Lee Urban, president of Portland West's board of directors

After YouthBuild appealed the decision, HUD agreed the grading formula was unfair, but didn't award Portland West any money. To offset the lost funding, Portland West secured financial support from sources ranging from the city of Portland to Unum and the state Department of Transportation. YouthBuild has also applied to become a special-purpose private school, which would allow it to collect tuition from school districts that refer kids to the program. "We're sort of hunkering down," said Lee Urban, the newly elected president of Portland West's board of directors. "We're using money wisely and looking for other sources."

This year, YouthBuild will switch to a regular school calendar, starting classes in September instead of October and accepting additional low-income students as space becomes available. Strimling said he was hopeful national leaders of YouthBuild would decide to fund Portland's program, allowing Portland West to enroll as many as 30 additional students by January. "I feel like it's a triumph because YouthBuild is surviving these federal cuts," Strimling said. "We've been able to keep it going."

PRIDE, after the fall

STUNG BY DEFEAT, GAY ACTIVISTS IN RURAL MAINE ARE SOWING THE SEEDS
OF A GRASS-ROOTS REVOLUTION

■ LAURA CONAWAY

Naomi Falcone watched with growing despair Feb. 10 as election returns from the gay-rights referendum poured in. For weeks, pollsters had predicted an easy victory for gay activists, and that prediction seemed credible to people who live in cities like Portland. But Falcone, a resident of Standish, had remained skeptical.

Falcone suspected that the centralized, top-down management of Maine Won't Discriminate had failed to win much support for equal rights outside liberal enclaves. She knew how little attention Maine Won't Discriminate had paid to voters in small towns like the one she lives in, and she knew how successful fundamentalist Christians had been in convincing small-town voters that gay people want special rights. "The assumption in gay culture, because it's urban-oriented, is that rural areas are dangerous, and places to be avoided," Falcone said. "They've conceded the rural areas, without even trying."

That concession proved fatal for supporters of equal rights. Falcone watched as election returns on flickering TV sets at the party in Portland's One City Center showed voters had rejected legislation that banned discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation—despite strong support for the measure in several cities and towns. Long after newscasters had declared victory for the anti-gay forces, queer leaders still had not addressed the audience. Karen Geraghty, the campaign manager, led a sort of samba line of befuddled-looking staffers back and forth through the dejected, dwindling crowd. When Geraghty finally took the microphone, she announced that Maine Won't Discriminate's calculations appeared to indicate victory for her side. The final tally showed her optimism was unwarranted.

"It was definitely mind-boggling," said Falcone.

The Feb. 10 defeat could have sent the civil rights movement reeling. But Falcone and other committed activists took the loss as a message clearly telegraphed by voters. They realized that if gay people are to win equal status under the law statewide, they must build support for homosexual freedom in the unlikelyst of places, from the fishing villages of Washington County to the mill towns of western Maine.

Naomi Falcone (right) and her partner, Madeleine Winter, in their Standish home. "We have to just be one of the neighbors, one of the community members," said Falcone. "That means that if a playground needs building, we'll be there."

The activists vowed to fight for their rights as full citizens by forming grass-roots community groups in far-flung locations, joining local chambers of commerce, speaking out at civic clubs and volunteering for other social-justice campaigns. By becoming more visible and gaining trust from straight voters in rural areas, gay Mainers hope to sow seeds of acceptance that will one day blossom into victory. "We have to just be one of the neighbors, one of the community members," Falcone said. "That means that if a playground needs building, we'll be there."

Alive and kicking

Falcone's promise that gay people would "be there" in rural communities has been backed by a growing group of queer activists.

At a March 10 meeting in Augusta, volunteers from across the state decided they wanted to break away from the urban-oriented campaigning of Maine Won't Discriminate and focus instead on teaching rural Mainers about the need for equal rights. Mitzi Lichtman, a resident of Swanville, in Waldo County, said people were tired of working in the atmosphere of perpetual crisis that pervades referendum battles. "We all agreed the campaign was not reaching out to rural Maine. We were doing campaigning, but we weren't doing education," Lichtman said. "There's a point where you say, 'Now it's time to not focus so much on the short-term.' Because whether we win or lose, we have to gain the respect of the total population, and contribute to that."

But asking people to create active and powerful rural groups without showing them how to do it is a recipe for failure. To better the odds, volunteers at the March meeting decided to organize a one-day workshop, to be held in May at Colby College.

That workshop, "Alive & Kicking: Life after Feb. 10," attracted some 50 activists, many of whom showed up early and stayed late. The conference included panel discussions on subjects ranging from strategies for countering the powerful "special rights" argument to tips for coming out in small-town Maine. "People really are so ready for something to do," said former state Rep. Susan Farnsworth of Hallowell. "People were looking for a constructive thing to do with their feelings about this [loss]."

In some ways, Farnsworth said, rural queers were better equipped than their urban counterparts to continue fighting after the wrenching loss. Racism and fear, spawned by defeat, threatened to undo years of activism and political organizing. But difficult times were nothing new to gay men and lesbians in places like Greenville. "If you live in a rural area," Farnsworth said, "you already know it's hard."

In fact, sexual minorities in gay-friendly cities like Portland could learn a lesson from their peers in small towns, who might consider themselves lucky to have even one gay friend. Living alone in potentially hostile environments has forced rural queers to join forces with politically active straight allies—fair-minded people who get involved in projects like creating local homeless shelters, preventing domestic violence or protesting racial discrimination. Farnsworth and others believe building natural networks will eventually lead to equal rights for sexual minorities—and increased acceptance of all types of people.

"The consensus is that we need to form local groups for people to talk about human rights, not just gay rights," Farnsworth said. "In order for us to be part of the community, we have to act like it. We say, and other people say, that when one group is discriminated against, everybody is affected. It's appropriate and timely that we find ways to work together locally."

At the May workshop, Falcone and her partner,

Madeleine Winter, pitched the idea of creating a nonprofit organization that would link the state's grass-roots groups. Falcone and Winter explained that rather than taking centralized control of the various chapters, the Maine Rural Network would provide support and training to help local activists accomplish their own goals.

Falcone quickly realized that simply talking about the virtues of a statewide network—while hoping someone else would take responsibility for creating one—wasn't enough. "This is silly," she said. "I'm telling other people to do it, and I should just go do it."

Winning the heartland

High on the list of priorities for Falcone and Winter is to make sure the Maine Rural Network isn't strictly a gay organization. They think straight allies are tired of helping queer activists who demand support during referendum fights but never give assistance in return. "Both Maine Won't Discriminate campaigns were run in crisis mode," Winter said. "So it's always, 'Oh, here come the gay people. They must want us to help them.' The issue is to build up connections when there isn't a crisis."

That's one of the lessons learned by leaders of the national Rural Organizing Project, based in Oregon, and it's part of the advice those leaders give to member groups

"We all agreed the campaign was not reaching out to rural Maine. We were doing campaigning, but we weren't doing education...[W]hether we win or lose, we have to gain the respect of the total population, and contribute to that." — Mitzi Lichtman of Swanville like the newly formed Maine Rural Network. Queer activists in Oregon founded their project in response to a violent, ongoing blitzkrieg of anti-gay referenda launched by the radical right there in 1992. Support for the homophobic measures was particularly strong in outlying areas and small towns, the same kinds of places where anti-gay sentiment runs deep in Maine. Without the help of straight rural allies, the battle for equality in Oregon would have been lost.

The Rural Organizing Project's co-director, Marcy Westerling, said the radical right has long claimed to have a monopoly on the sympathies of voters in small-town America, but progressive forces shouldn't give up without a fight. "They say it's theirs because that's where the heartland is," said Westerling, who will travel to Maine in June to lecture at a series of workshops across the state. "But I think it's very legitimate to say it's theirs because no one ever bothered to challenge them."

In fact, rural activists have already altered Maine's political landscape, especially in the traditionally more cosmopolitan coastal areas, where tourist dollars keep the economy alive. In Ogunquit, town leaders voted to express their official disappointment with the Feb. 10 referendum results. The Bar Harbor Town Council took the matter one step further, enacting a human rights ordinance that bans discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. After the measure passed, opponents talked about attempting citizens' repeal, but their efforts fizzled and the measure took effect. Peter Rees of Trenton, a founder of the Hancock County Community Network, said more than 15 years of progressive activism by his group may have paved the way for equal protection. "It's hard to know exactly what happened," Rees said, "but I think that's a contribution."

The Hancock County organization originally concentrated on opposing nuclear armament, but has since worked toward founding a homeless shelter and winning gay rights. Rees said the nonprofit includes representatives of about 75 political groups and has allies ranging from police officers to ministers. "That was our bright idea," he said, "that we reached out to have an umbrella group."

Even in staunchly conservative Aroostook County, determined activists have made inroads. Northern Lambda Nord, a gay and lesbian group led by Dick Harrison of New Sweden, has joined the chambers of commerce in Caribou, Presque Isle, Madawaska and Fort Fairfield. Harrison said queer members try to identify straight allies, then work with them on a variety of community issues. "It creates visibility for our organization, but it's also challenging homophobia," Harrison said. "It wasn't too many years ago when we had given a donation to the Caribou chamber and they sent it back. Now, they ask us for money. Things have changed."

Volunteers for the Maine Speakout Project have also carried a message of tolerance to rural parts of the state. Founded in 1995, Speakout claims chapters in 13 counties. Members give talks about being gay at offices, churches and clubs, often in their hometowns. Director Jonathan Lee said the group's goal is to reach the 70 percent of Maine residents who are neither virulent homophobes nor die-hard supporters of equal rights. Lee said many people in rural areas have never met an openly gay person, and they don't understand why sexual minorities need legal protection. "Outside of Portland, most people live in small towns, and that's where people need to speak out," Lee said. "Rural organizing is not a new thing for us."

It's about values

One of the harshest criticisms leveled at Maine Won't Discriminate is the charge that the group's leadership opted to downplay the needs of gay men and lesbians—and focus instead on convoluted issues like local control—in a failed effort to secure more support among conservative voters in small towns.

Falcone, who serves as coordinator of the Maine Rural Network, said that strategy proved dangerous for rural queers. By arguing that gay men and lesbians deserve rights because they're just like everyone else, she says, activists inadvertently sent a signal that it's acceptable to persecute sexual minorities who can't pass for straight. "That's a very destructive message," she said. "It says we can't even affirm ourselves, so why should anybody else?"

It's no secret that the radical right's emphasis on protecting "family values" has galvanized scores of fundamentalist Christians opposed to granting homosexuals equal status in society. Westerling, of the national Rural Organizing Project, said progressive activists should fight fire with fire by appealing to the independence cherished by many residents of small towns. "We're forming groups of people to say, 'We're not going to let you chip away at our core values of democracy, and these [anti-gay] laws are anti-democratic,'" she said. "You're creating a value-driven constituency that will stand front and center and say, 'You will not take away any of our rights.'"

Westerling warned that activists may not gain support in rural areas quickly. She said volunteers have to expect and accept the occasional defeat, even as they knit together an eventual victory. That's a difficult route to travel, she said, but it may be the only road to freedom. "We have to say that we're in this for the long haul," she said, "and the only way to be in this for the long haul is to be organized everywhere. It doesn't matter whether there are only four voters in Standish—we need to value everyone there."

RIGHTS of passage

A new generation of queer youth comes out to combat discrimination with courage, education — and fun.

"I'm sick of hearing the words 'dyke' and 'fag' at school," said South Portland High School student Jen Stuart. "I really wanted people to know who I was, even if they hated that."

KIMBERLY JEAN SMITH

The day Jen Stuart told 60 or so of her South Portland High School classmates she was queer was a nervous one. On the way to her morning health class — one of three classes where she was scheduled to speak about homosexuality — 17-year-old Stuart said she felt sick to her stomach. She was starting to waver about her big coming-out plans.

Even though it was school officials who scheduled the talks, in the days before, two teachers, the school's principal, a guidance counselor and a family friend had each begged her to keep secret the fact that she had the same romantic feelings for girls that she had for boys — that she was bisexual. They worried that other students would tease and beat the tiny Stuart, who stands only a fraction over five feet tall. And, Stuart remembered, the adults described their fears to her in vivid detail, warning she would become a sacrificial lamb.

By the time they were finished, said Stuart, "I was crying .... It was just so important to me." Though she had found a group of new, understanding friends through Outright — a Portland-based group that gives young people a chance to talk about their sexuality — she faced constant negative comments about gay people at her school. "It's up to me," she remembered thinking to herself. "I'm sick of hearing the words 'dyke' and 'fag' at school .... I really wanted people to know who I was, even if they hated that."

And so, last fall, Stuart sat in front of her morning health class, while 20 blank faces stared back waiting to hear what she had to say.

She told them how hard it was to be sitting in front of them wondering if they would feel differently about her at the end of class than they did the day before. She said, with shaking hands, "I understand if somebody feels that way, just as long as they are not throwing it in my face." By the end of her presentation, she had answered questions such as if she was dating a girl or guy, if she had ever been harassed and how she dealt with homophobia at school. She even received a hug from a student who told her she'd be Stuart's friend no matter what.

But, Stuart said, her talk had also created a kind of a stunned yet respectful silence between the high school's 985 other students and herself — a silence that both comforts and haunts her to this day. She is comforted because "dyke" and "fag" are among the words students no longer say in her presence. But she is haunted because the threat of violence, even if never acted upon, is always there. Stuart can never really relax. Cathy Kidman, a social worker who serves as Outright's executive director, said that's a common feeling among gay and bisexual youth. "Even if a school tolerates your presence," Kidman said, "that's not the same as affirmation."

Outright, which has tripled its membership since it was founded in 1987, helped nearly 150 young people under the age of 22 last year. The group offers a place for teenagers to meet friends, learn about issues such as HIV and AIDS, and find psychological support from people who understand the complexity and importance of sexual identity. For many Greater Portland teenagers, it is the one place they hear anything good about the sometimes confusing feelings they feel for their same-sex peers. Perhaps equally important, key decisions are made by young people themselves, who according to Outright's bylaws must make up at least one-third of its board of directors.

It's up to group members like Stuart and Sage Hylton-Lemons, the 18-year-old co-president of Outright's board, to decide when it's time to fight for acceptance in their schools and workplaces and when it's time to celebrate. And sometimes, taking a stand and throwing a party can look much the same. When it came time to mark Outright's 10th anniversary, the young people said they wanted a prom.

On May 9, nearly 200 young gay, straight, bisexual and transgendered people met in a ballroom at Portland's Holiday Inn By the Bay. Then, like thousands of straight high-schoolers throughout history, they danced until morning. For many adults, the word prom conjures up images of tacky dresses, drunken messes and lost virginity, but for the young people who make up Outright, it was a symbol of equality and pride.

"I couldn't tell you why high schools started having proms," said Hylton-Lemons. "But you are supposed to have fun. All your friends are going and for a lot of gay and lesbian youth it is a very painful time. You feel the hatred."

Hylton-Lemons is among the dozens of Outright members who have left school because the hostility they find there interferes with their studies. Once other students at Deering High School found out Hylton-Lemons was gay, he was insulted in the halls and threatened nearly every day. "It would always be something," he said. He never believed school administrators understood or cared enough to intervene.

Since leaving Deering, Hylton-Lemons said he has been working toward his general equivalency degree. He shares an apartment with friends from Outright. Now, he feels he's a part of a community that understands and welcomes him. But because he came out so young, he missed some of the rites of passage that heterosexual kids take for granted. Without those rituals, Kidman said, people can begin to feel painfully disconnected from the world around them.

Before Outright's prom, Hylton-Lemons, who spent nearly two months helping to organize it, had plenty to worry about. The event, which featured a professional DJ and a "Summer Nights" theme, cost $1,500 to produce — a large chunk of change for a group with a budget of just $114,000 a year, a desperate need to leave its cramped offices and a goal of hiring new staff to keep the space open as often as its members would like. But the young people worried that if the group didn't have a party, they would miss the opportunity to mark a time in their lives that would never come again. They decided to charge a $10 admission to cover costs.

"The biggest, scariest thing was, were we going to get even the smallest amount of people that we needed" to break even, said Hylton-Lemons. That wasn't their only concern. "There were rumors that there was going to be protests, or something," he said. "The night of the prom, I was like, Goddess, please don't let anything happen."

That night, tables were decorated with center pieces made from plastic sand buckets filled with chocolate candy. Hors d'oeuvres were set on ice. Couples posed under a rainbow arch wearing their formal gowns and tuxedos. Young men showed up in spandex dresses, young women in dress pants and combat boots. There were smiles instead of fear. There was joy instead of shame.

Just one hour after opening the doors, Outright had already raised $600. By the end of the night, the prom broke even. Hylton-Lemons searched for a phone in the lobby. "I called my mom in tears," he said. "It's going great."

Jen Stuart was one of four people elected by popular vote to a royal court, in a kind of joyfully absurd ceremony with lots of laughter and paper crowns. Coming to Outright's prom meant Stuart had to miss South Portland's prom, which was scheduled for the same night. But after comparing notes with her friends at school, she wasn't sorry about the choice she made.

"Basically, the goal I wanted was to have everyone feel welcome and not isolated or weird," Stuart said. "[I wanted] the straight kids to feel welcome, the gay kids to feel welcome, the drag queens to feel welcome. And that's exactly what happened."

Walking the walk

Pride celebrations are nothing new to Portland. They've been going on since 1987, when 200 people took to the city's streets for a march in celebration and defense of all people's right to love as they choose. As the years have passed, certain elements of the celebration have become traditions familiar to gay and straight alike — the Pier Dance, the parade, the bikers, the drag queens. Pride celebrations have made gay and lesbian people visible in a way that would have been hard to imagine a generation ago. And, as queer issues have come out of the closet around the country, positive images of gay, lesbian and bisexual people have become increasingly common in the culture at large. There's no question that acceptance of the wide range of human sexuality is on the rise in the United States. It's a heartening trend.

But the Feb. 10 referendum repeal of gay rights legislation showed just how far we have to go in Maine before the state's core values of tolerance and individual liberty become a reality for all our citizens. Activists have had to find new and creative ways of organizing support for equal rights (see "Pride, after the fall," page 10). That means coming out, and staying out, not only in cities but in rural communities as well.

Activists are also working to take advantage of Portland's Pride Weekend (June 19-21 this year) as an occasion for teaching as well as celebration. This year, the Maine Speakout Project is trying something new — a group walk around Back Cove, with same-sex couples, mixed-sex couples and families all holding hands as they stroll along Portland's most popular pathway. The event will be held on June 21, with participants gathering in the Back Cove parking lot across from Shop 'n Save at 7 p.m.

The simple symbolism of this action could be enormous. A lot of straight people do feel threatened and confused by the idea of same-sex couples. Those fears are, at least in part, fueled by the sheer unfamiliarity of seeing queer people engaging in the most mundane displays of public affection — like just holding hands. It's time to demystify such displays, because there's really nothing mysterious about them.

If you believe in the right of all people to love without fear, consider walking the boulevard with your loved one June 21. It's a perfectly natural thing to do.

Correction

The story "I want my MPG" (5.28.98) contained erroneous figures for University of Southern Maine student representation on WMPG's paid and volunteer staff and for the percentage of WMPG's budget that comes from student fees. The most recent figures available are from November 1997. Of 147 staff at that time, 36 were students. Student fees make up about half the station's budget.

High praise for Haddad

Laura Conaway's piece on Edward Haddad and his efforts on behalf of Maine's Department of Human Services ("Conflict of interest?" 5.28.98) aptly characterizes the man I've known and considered a friend for almost 50 years: forever open and honest, caring and compassionate, competent and effective, thoughtful and ethical. Here's to 50 more years of Ed's continuing presence and good works! The city of Portland and the state of Maine are both the better for them.

Confused anti-Christianity

Aaron Belmont's vitriolic, bigoted and just plain weird attack on Christianity on your letters page ("Religion should go," 5.28.98) was, to say the least, unique. He managed to incorporate the Norse mythological afterlife of Valhalla into the Christian canon, and placed it, for some reason, in the suburbs. Come again? He then stated that Greco-Roman temples "were vandalized and destroyed by intolerant Christians." I suggest Mr. Belmont look up "vandal" in the dictionary. It will be enlightening. Unless he thinks that they were Christians, too (like the Vikings).

Intolerance is not solely a Christian vice, Mr. Belmont. You can find it in the Taliban Muslims of Afghanistan, the orthodox leftists of academia — and in the mirror.

(For the record, I am an agnostic and a libertarian. I oppose intolerance of any kind, religious or secular.)

The importance of a church

The letter "Religion should go" (5.28.98) has totally infuriated me. Aaron Belmont sounds to me like a man with nothing better to do than bash very-important community churches.

Belmont claims "these dinosaurs are of no historical importance and their value can be measured by the abandonment of their parishioners." He should be made aware that St. Dominic's is in a "trying-to-get-by" neighborhood, and that its importance is more than that of history.

St. Dominic's has been a place of worship for many residents of the West End for many years. I personally was baptized at St. Dominic's and have watched my own mother and family members carried in their coffins up the stairs of St. Dominic's.

The feelings and bittersweet memories many residents (myself included) share of St. Dominic's cannot be measured.

Belmont should be ashamed of his "secular self" for blatantly disregarding the importance of St. Dominic's to many, many people, and for referring to St. Dominic's, or any place people go to worship their god, as a white elephant, a mishmash and a barn.

Paved with good intentions

CBW's recent issue "It's a man thing" (5.28.98) seemed well-intentioned, particularly in addressing important health subjects, for instance, prostate cancer. Yet, one cannot help but wonder what the true function of Sarah Goodyear's "Comment" ("Men are special, too") was. At best, it seemed a gratuitous explanation, at worst, an apology. Do the editors of CBW actually feel the need to justify a so-called men's issue? Again, I wonder why and to whom?

Furthermore, why drag old Norman Mailer into the conversation except, perhaps, to focus the thinly veiled contempt of Ms. Goodyear? He was a product of his times, just as we are of ours. Be that as it may, I doubt that he would much appreciate being associated with so ludicrous a misnomer as "ghettoization." Such self-serving linguistic inventions do little to advance the cause of mutual respect and understanding.

Finally, if CBW's editors wish to apologize for anything, it should be the full page of "sex for sale" advertisements listed under adult services. By accepting and printing these ads, CBW not only undermines its own identity as a humane, enlightened publication, but actually becomes a participant in the increasingly insidious commercial sex industry.

Thanks, but do better next time

Thanks for your special feature on men's issues (5.28.98). I think I was one of the people Sarah Goodyear mentioned in her editorial who has asked for just such an issue. I'd like to offer a few pointers for your next men's issue:

Maybe you can invest some more energy in identifying what men's issues really are, like complete lack of reproductive rights, men's dropping life expectancy, the fact that the leading fatal diseases target men far more than women, that men are the primary victims of crime, violence and murder, that men suffer the vast majority of workplace deaths and injuries, that the majority of people suffering drug and alcohol addiction are male, the chronic underdiagnosis of mental disease in men, the fact that boys are faring so poorly in school, violence against men as entertainment, etc. It's a pretty bleak picture, but it could easily be balanced with some reporting on healing aspects of the men's community, such as

CBW Q

In the window of Material Objects on Congress Street, there are three mannequins — a guy flanked by two women. What's going on? Is he dating them both, or are they all just friends, or what?

When that question was posed to Susan Lakari, the shop's owner, her first response was to laugh. It wasn't so much of a jocular guffaw as the titter of someone deeply weirded-out. "You want me to have an answer for that?" she asked incredulously. Instead of evaporating as she'd hoped, the inquiry hung there, suspended in the electronic void of the telephone lines. "I think it's his sisters," she said finally. "I don't know. I have to go look at them again."

Got a burning question about life in Greater Portland? Let CBW's crack investigative squad sort it out for you. Those whose questions are selected for publication will receive a complimentary SPANND refrigerator magnet. CBW Q, 561 Congress St., Portland, ME 04101, or by fax: 775-1615.

men's gatherings, men working in schools, men as primary caregivers, etc.

Maybe you could also find some men to write these articles. While women's viewpoints are important, and I would never suggest that their voices on these issues be silenced, I am getting a little tired of women telling me about fatherhood. Do you have men writing the articles for your women's features?

I found Ms. Goodyear's editorial a bit on the condescending side, as well. Why can't this feature be offered with open arms, and not as giving in to men's perceived whining? Goodyear says that men's issues receive "more than enough coverage every day of the week in every conceivable medium of expression," but I don't know where she gets this idea from. When was the last time you saw coverage of any of those issues mentioned above, or any other issue of importance to men?

After reviewing the lack of detailed, non-judgmental coverage even in the liberal CBW, is it any wonder that men are asking for their turn?

Clearing the airwaves

As a person elected by the student body of University of Southern Maine (USM) to represent their concerns, and as the chair of the Student Senate, I feel that I have to respond to the myriad inaccuracies, half-truths, and outright lies that litter Zoë S. Miller's "I want my MPG" (5.21.98). First, I take great offense at her description of our proposals as "clumsily worded ... threatening the station's traditional independence."

That first letter took roughly an-hour and a half to compose. The tone was direct and matter-of-fact. At the end of the letter it stated, "We will present a more detailed plan of action by the end of the business day Wednesday (22 April 98)." There was no "adding to the confusion," as you may have been led to believe, because we held their hands and walked them through every step of the process. By keeping the whole station informed, as opposed to just the board of directors, we had hoped to diffuse any rumors or conflicts before they started.

Second, the article states that "WMPG gets about a third of its budget from the Student Senate, and students make up about 40 percent of its volunteer staff." Nothing in that sentence is based in fact (other than the station getting some money from us). For fiscal '97-'98, for which I served as treasurer of the Senate, WMPG received $64,080, which was part of a $131,675 budget. According to my calculations — granted I am a mere student — that comes out to 47.86 percent. But, given the fact that this year the station has revenues aside from student activity fee monies amounting to barely a third of projections, that makes the actual percentage paid by students 50.2 percent. In a document presented to then-Student Senate Chair Doug Nadeau by then-station manager Robert Rosenthal, dated 11.4.97, about the composition of station staff, out of 147 paid and volunteer staff, only 36 were students. But even that number is probably incorrect because the three categories they placed students in (full-time, part-time, & work-study) left the door wide open for double counting. Again, I am by all accounts just a student, but that comes out to 24.48 percent. A far cry from CBW's 40 percent.

My third concern is about the shortfall this fiscal year at the station. When it was brought to the Senate's attention that the station was in the hole, our business manager had projections reaching $14,000. Had it not been for a spending freeze and a delay in the hiring of both a station manager and a development director, that figure, or something close to it, would have been realized. The shortfall has absolutely nothing to do with the change in timing of the disbursement of funds.

Fiscal '96-'97 saw the station stretch a 12-month budget 14 months while the disbursement changed from July to September. For fiscal '97-'98 they couldn't make a 12-month budget last even eight or nine months. As for Rosenthal's indignant comment that the station's constituency is not just the 10,000 students but the 150,000 in the greater community — while true in concept, it's representative of the way the station views students. If one outside company underwrote half of their budget they'd go out of their way to appease them.

We're not asking for much. I don't care what gets put on the air. As long as the FCC stays away from us and those who listen and those who are on the air are having fun, it's all good. I applaud MPG's creation of internships, but not telling us about them until we complain about lack of student involvement isn't fair to anyone, especially not to Sara Parisien.

Lastly, like it or not, the board of directors is a bureaucracy. The way ideas get presented to bureaucracies is through proposals made by those on one side of an issue. After it's proposed, then it gets discussed by all of the stakeholders, not before. That's how it is done in Washington, D.C., in Augusta, and that's how it is done at USM.

Monstrous misrepresentation

I read Al Diamon's political column from time to time and I never wrote before because, hey — what do I know about politics? But one thing I do know is movies ... and Diamon's review of "Godzilla" (5.28.98) was way off. First, Matthew Broderick was visibly uncomfortable. His strained romance with Blondie What's-her-name was downright painful. Second, how can you enjoy a movie that doesn't have a villain until the last half hour of the film? For the first 90 minutes of the movie, Godzilla is simply a displaced animal trying to do his thing. Then all of a sudden the filmmakers realized that they need to end the movie, so it's, "Hey! Let's kill the monster!"

The real Godzilla, meaning the cheesy Japanese film star, had an agenda. He was on a mission and from the first sight he had to be stopped. Even the dinosaurs in "Jurassic Park" were portrayed as animals and were treated as such by the film's characters.

Which brings me to my third point. How can a movie that cracked the "Jurassic Park" franchise (Godzilla stomping on the T. rex skeleton — "Size DOES Matter") in its trailers then take to directly stealing from the film it so eloquently razed? The baby Godzilla scene was nothing more than a ripoff of the velociraptor scenes from "Jurassic Park" and "The Lost World." I thought I would love a giant lizard trouncing New York City, but it turned out to be just a Godzilla whose roar was worse than his bite.

Dance fever: Fans of Esduardo Mariscal were treated to a new work by the local choreographer and dancer June 4 and 5 at the Portland Performing Arts Center. As do most of Mariscal's surreal and fabulous creations, "Before the End" includes several images that stick in a viewer's brain and breed wild ideas: a pile of crumpled newspapers that wriggles and stirs and comes to life; a man in drag forced to strip to a humiliated nakedness; and, perhaps most memorably, a hapless psychotherapy patient (danced with gut-twisting athleticism by Harold Philbrook) flopping hopelessly under the cold gaze of his shrink. See a reprise of "Before the End," June 20, on a program of performances benefiting the Maine Speakout Project June 20 at the Portland Performing Arts Center, 25A Forest Ave., Portland, at 7 p.m. Tickets are $10 for the show and $25 for the show and subsequent reception. 879-0480.

Guzzle guide: Casco Bay Brewing's new pilser features a label, the background of which is a nautical chart showing part of Portland Harbor. But the bottle also carries this disclaimer: "Map not for navigational purposes." Were the brewers actually worried somebody would pound a few down, and then try to sail the Calendar Islands using the minuscule markings on a beer container? "A lot of fishermen get a kick out of [the disclaimer]," said Tim Boardman, brewery customer relations person. "It's just a bit of humor. And just in case. We weren't sure if it was legally required or not."

Starbucks fever: When Harding's Book Shop closed last week, rumors began to fly that Starbucks was eyeing the spot for a second Portland location. Not true, said Starbucks spokesperson Lisa Langone. Rumors are "a normal occurrence after a [Starbucks] opens," said Langone. "Nothing's happening this year, but of course, we wouldn't rule anything out in the future if demand requested that another store be opened. We always want to satisfy our customers." As for the fate of local poetry rag The Café Review, which had Harding's as its home base, the journal will continue. Editor Steve Luttrell couldn't be reached, but is rumored to be taking off for a respite and some poetry readings in Europe.

Portland's rig-rockers Diesel Doug and the Long Haul Truckers hit the road this week for Toronto and the North By Northeast music conference, where they'll headline June 12 at Ted's Wrecking Yard. The Truckers have been talking with a handful of indie label representatives, who lead singer Scott Link says "aren't interested enough to travel to come see our show, but this way we get them to see it." Let's hope the listing in NXNE's program doesn't confuse any interested parties: "Diesel Doug and the Long Hair Truckers." CBW

Horsing around

Kids with disabilities discover the joy — and therapy — of horseback riding

■ JANE MEYER

This isn't the Derby. It's not the Preakness. And the horse rounding the corner isn't a racehorse, or even a thoroughbred. He's just a pony named Mr. Baker. But he is a champion. And he is real quiet.

He has to be. His rider, Annie White, has cerebral palsy. Sometimes, Annie has a hard time sitting up on her own. But when she is placed on top of the little brown horse, Annie sits tall after swaying along with his swinging walk for just a few minutes.

"It's amazing to watch," says her mother, Dorothy White. "Annie loves it. I think it's the sheer joy of feeling the animal beneath her and knowing that she's a little bit in charge."

Mr. Baker belongs to Patty Carton, one of the local physical therapists responsible for the establishment of Riding to the Top (RTT), the therapeutic riding program in Windham founded in 1993 on the belief that horses are excellent healers.

"Forming a relationship with a horse — to ride and to care for a big, beautiful animal — is a powerful thing, especially for someone who is offered less opportunity to do special things," Carton says. "Spending time with horses is not only therapeutic, but it's fun. It's outdoors. People with disabilities can lead very fulfilling lives if their mind and spirit is alive."

And so, at this barn, riders don't just show up at the barn ready to ride. If they are physically able to, they take their horses out of their stalls, brush them, and tack them up themselves. And then the magic really begins.

"When they get up on that horse, for the first time in their life, they are not looking up at people. They are not struggling to move; the horse is providing the power for them. And all of a sudden, they are looking down at people," explains Sarah Bronson, another founder and physical therapist at RTT.

For a child who has spent a lifetime in a wheelchair, this has got to be right up there with learning how to fly. In Cumberland County alone, there are over four thousand children who receive special education services. That's a lot of children. For many of them, therapeutic riding is a new opportunity which stands out in an "I get to do that?" kind of way. It's not mainstream therapy, but it works. As sport, as education, and as medicine.

The idea was conceived in Europe roughly 50 years ago by a group of intuitive (and brave) equestrians who recognized that the horse experience — everything from the sensory feedback of touching a horse to the relationship developed when horse and rider communicate with each other — is a powerful learning tool. Although therapeutic riding originally addressed only physical disabilities, the therapy has now grown into a respected treatment method targeting a range of disabilities that includes multiple sclerosis, Down's syndrome, cerebral palsy, muscular dystrophy, autism, spina bifida, polio, limb deformities, amputations, hearing and speech disorders, spinal and head injuries, low vision, arthritis, learning disabilities and emotional disorders. RTT serves more than 75 riders in the Greater Portland area ranging in age from 3-70. Two hundred and fifty volunteers, who help with everything from barn chores to office work, are the cornerstone of the nonprofit organization.

To make the system work safely, RTT builds a team of therapists and trained volunteers to support each rider. While one person controls the horse by leading it, the others serve as "sidewalkers" alongside the rider to help with balance, posture and moral support. Riders with physical disabilities and abnormal muscle tone particularly benefit from the warmth and the rhythmic rocking of the horse's back muscles. In essence, the three-dimensional swing of the horse's body teaches the rider's body the story of walking.

"A horse's cadence is very similar to a human's cadence," Bronson says. "The horse's gait simulates a normal movement of the human pelvis, giving riders some sense of how those muscles and joints move together." This sensory awareness strengthens and stabilizes the rider's trunk and improves body control and motor skills. By activating the respiratory system, riding stimulates speech and normalizes muscle tone.

Therapists match each horse and rider carefully. Size, temperament and gait make a difference. For example, smooth-gaited horses are paired with riders who have high muscle tone to encourage relaxation. Likewise, horses with higher (bumpier) action are used under riders with low muscle tone, to stimulate their muscles.

One of the greatest challenges, particularly for children with emotional, behavioral or learning disabilities, comes in mastering communication skills with two or more new bodies, one of which has pretty big feet. Riders must learn to trust both the human-to-human and the human-to-animal connections. On top of this, riders must behave within certain guidelines. They work on cognitive skills, memory and concentration.

"Maneuvering a horse is about negotiating a relationship at a very basic level. After completing a circle and halting at the end, the child has controlled movement of a 1,000-pound animal. That brings cooperation skills and a sense of completion into the picture," says Meghan Reese, an instructor and volunteer coordinator, who is also the barn manager at RTT.

But maybe riding's most powerful virtue as a behavioral tool is also its simplest. Kids dig horses. Going to the barn is a treat, a motivating factor. And parents, teachers, and therapists report on the tremendous positive change in their children's behavior when horses enter the picture.

Bronson explains, "I think it's a combination of the carrot, if you will, of participating in something as exciting and unique as going to a farm and dealing with these animals, and the actual physical activity. These children need to direct their energy in constructive ways. Riding provides that outlet, and at the same time it boosts self-confidence."

Nathan Davis is another rider at Riding to the Top. Like Annie White, Nathan has cerebral palsy, but he can walk. Nathan's legs are long and well-built for riding.

"When they get up on that horse, for the first time in their life, they are not looking up at people. They are not struggling to move; the horse is providing the power for them. And all of a sudden, they are looking down at people."
— Sarah Bronson, co-founder and physical therapist at Riding to the Top

Nate's parents, Norm and Paula Davis, feel that riding has been a "good thing all around" for their son. They have noticed improvements in his balance and coordination, and also in his self-esteem. "Riding gives Nate a non-competitive sport that he can actually participate in and be good at," his father explains. "It's his time."

Nate gives his horse a treat before he and his family leave the barn. It's his favorite part of each session.

After working out of other barns for five years, RTT recently decided to buy its own facility. Last month, the group closed on a barn in Windham. Now it's a matter of filling it up with horses. Equine candidates for the program need to be exceptionally quiet — bombproof — and easy to handle around the barn. Suitable animals are found all over the country: at farms, at racetracks, in backyard sheds. Often they are donated. It does take a special type. But good-willed horses are not hard to come by.

"Most horses are very kind. They are incredibly forgiving beasts," says Curry Ander, RTT's new program director. "And horses are special animals because they are surrounded by a certain mystique which pervades our culture."

She's right. Horses are surrounded by a universal magic. They are in our storybooks, our blockbuster films. Horses are part of our mystical lives. Why? It's hard to put a finger on it. After all, a horse is only a big hairy creature that cannot talk — much less sit on your lap — and who looks, as Ian Fleming said, dangerous at both ends and most uncomfortable in the middle.

Maybe it ties into the delicate balance of power that horse and human continually negotiate. The fact of the matter is, people depend on horses as much as horses depend on people. It seems that Xenophon's statement that "the outside of a horse is the best thing for the inside of a man" has withstood the test of time.

Prime cut

If you've ever taken in a rockabilly or Americana show in Portland, then you probably know Dave Burd as that tall, skinny guy with the groovy glasses and the sharp Maine wit who's played guitar for such Portland über-bands as Rumford, Shutdown 66, Nick Danger and the Sideburners and short-lived country rock outfit The Baptismos. What you may not know is that Burd is on the mend from a nasty auto accident he suffered this spring. Attend the Dave Burd benefit show and you can help him out with his bills. Take in the good tunes of Diesel Doug and the Long Haul Truckers, Jenny Jumpstart and The Piners and toss back a few cold ones for Dave's sake, June 14 at Free Street Taverna, 128 Free St., at 10 pm. $5 donation. 774-1114.

Unbearable lightness
We all know that the "Inferno" is the best book in Dante's "Divine Comedy." It's more interesting, better written and funnier than the rest of the trilogy, not in spite of the ugliness of the subject matter, but because of it. To be blunt, hell makes better copy than heaven. (Of course, wallowing in ugliness doesn't guarantee interesting art either. Most recent heavy metal proves that.) We can talk all we want about how unhealthy such negativity is, but without it, art isn't so artful, and entertainment just doesn't entertain.

Which brings us to the singer-songwriter, a musical phenomenon with a well-deserved reputation for being wimpy and dull. It isn't the acoustic guitars and time-worn melodies that are the culprits. It's the singer-songwriter's over-reliance on self-help lyrics and a strong healthy persona, combined with a lack of any darkness in the music, that inspires the listener to yawn.

Portland-based singer-songwriter Elizabeth Ross isn't a total bore, but she's on too much of a positivity kick to matter much. On her new CD, "One of a Kind," Ross makes slightly rootsy acoustic pop that's strong on laid-back melodicism. As a whole, the music is pretty without being beautiful, heartfelt without being passionate and sincere without being honest. The album has its merits, in Ross' smooth warm singing and her understated melodies. But it's left to the guests to create the most memorable moments, from Ben Trout's mandolin on "Life (Gotta Live It)" and the Paul French-penned title tune that has more depth and nuance than the other eight songs combined.

Ross is living proof that too much positivity can rot the brain. On the song "Stand Up," she sings, "I'm gonna sing my song." But what does she mean by "gonna"? Isn't she already singing her song as she's singing that line? Yes, it's a freaking metaphor, but that doesn't mean it doesn't have to make any sense. When this CD is over, all that's memorable is a couple of guest shots and one bad metaphor.

Elizabeth Ross' "One of a Kind" is available at Bull Moose Music for $12.97. Ross will have her CD release party at Raoul's Roadside Attraction, 865 Forest Ave., June 11 at 8 p.m. Tix: $5. 773-6886.

Darkness almost falls
The Topsham-based singer-songwriter Jennifer Porter produces more memorable music on her CD "Hyacinth Boy Blue." The album features an interesting mix of Latin-jazz fusion and singer-songwriter pathos. The classically trained Porter ably demonstrates her impressive chops while her band, featuring flutist Carl Dimow, lays down some pleasant light grooves. It's all reminiscent of what Chick Corea did with the original version of Return to Forever, back before Scientology turned his mind to mush.

To Porter's credit, her songs do deal with darkness: couples falling apart, uncontrollable rage and food addiction. But the darkness seems to lurk somewhere around corners, a fleeting shadow across all the pretty melodies. Just when you think it's going to turn dirty and ugly, she pulls you out of the mud and tells you how wrong and unhealthy it all is, thereby ruining your fun.

Artists, when confronted with their dark sides, should give them firm handshakes, invite them to sit down for drinks, and get to know them. I imagine Porter would, instead, immediately start lecturing hers.

In the end, her CD is more tasteful than fun or moving, and when it's over, the listener is left with more admiration for Porter's talent than any desire to hear her album again.

Jennifer Porter's "Hyacinth Boy Blue" is available at Bull Moose Music for $12.97.

Performance

center stage

Presented by PCA Great Performances, "West Side Story" is a modern retelling of the quintessential 'til-death-do-us-part love story, "Romeo and Juliet." The musical transports Shakespeare's tale of feuding broods and star-crossed lovers from the byways of Verona to the streets of New York City — where gangs roam the concrete jungle, violently protecting their stomping grounds. Accordingly, the play's dialogue reflects the grittiness of the urban new order. Marie: "Tony, Tony, where art thou, Tony, you lazy bum! You got two minutes to get your troublemakin' rear end up here before I throw out this pot roast!" The Jets go head-to-head with the Sharks in this new touring Broadway production, June 13 at Merrill Auditorium, 20 Myrtle St, Portland, at 3 pm and 8 pm. Tix: $32-$46. 842-0800.

Jazz to the power of five: The Charlie Kohlase Quintet performs June 12.

friday 12

"SCOTTISH MUSIC & DANCE"

Among the developments predicted for the next millennium is a global dress code, consisting of a kilt, a tam-o-shanter and a breastplate of thorny, poisonous needles. But we needn't wait that long to see some plaid. "Scottish Music & Dance" features performances by Highland and step dancer Laura Scott, Scottish fiddler Ed Pearlman and Scottish singer, guitarist and harp player Tony Cuffe - in addition to Highland and hardshoe dancing by Scott's students. At the Portland Performing Arts Center, 25A Forest Ave., at 7:30 p.m. Tix: $10. 874-6068.

THE CHARLIE KOHLASE QUINTET

The motto "bigger is better," claim analysts, will enjoy a resurgence in the next millennium. To that end, CDs will be replaced with heavy, awkward cubes approximately the size of a dishwasher. In the here and now, music lovers can catch the Charlie Kohlase Quintet, a jazz band whose cool mixture of the whimsical and the straightforward earned the Boston Music Award for best indie jazz album in 1996. Led by Kohlase on alto and baritone sax, the group swings from introspective numbers like "Hard to Forget" to the growling rhythms of "If I Could." At the Free Street Taverna, 128 Free St., Portland, at 9 p.m. Tix: $5. 828-1310.

"CARIBBEAN RHYTHMS"

The future doesn't look good for the Caribbean, which scientists believe will retire in the year 2011 and move back to its hometown in Buena Vista Iowa. Before then, parents and kids can do some moving of their own at "Caribbean Rhythms," featuring drummer Michael Wingfield. Families have the opportunity to try their own hands at rhythm-making with an interactive workshop, followed by a rollicking, hip-swaying, drum-driven performance. At the Children's Museum of Maine, 142 Free St., Portland, from 11 a.m.-noon and 1-1:30 p.m. Free with museum admission ($5/under 1 free). 828-1234.

1998 SOUTHERN MAINE PRIDE LESBIAN, GAY, BISEXUAL & TRANSGENDER COMMUNITY FESTIVAL PLANNING COMMITTEE...

Southern Maine Pride was incorporated in 1995, but the founding organization dates to our first Pride March in 1987. Pride has developed to be one of Portland's officially declared annual festivals and has become one of the largest such events north of Boston, as well as one of the most successful national Pride Festivals. We have calculated our financial impact to the area to be over $150,000 in a three to four day span annually. Our festival participants are your neighbors, business people, and families, all making an impact on the social fabric of Maine's most unique city, Portland.

Further, Southern Maine Pride does more than the annual festival. Pride's charter is to provide support, networking and education for/to lesbian/gay/bisexual/transgendered peoples and their allies. As such, SoMePride has undertaken several programs. In 1996 we started a short summer series of anti-violence presentations at Maine bars, bridging the less politically involved community with local police anti-bias representatives. In keeping with that program and highlighting biased violence, Pride brought Claudia Brenner, a biased attack survivor and national anti-violence advocate to Portland for a series of appearances. In 1997 SoMePride was proud to subsidize and circulate the traveling exhibit about lesbian and gay families called "Love Makes A Family", which was very publicly exhibited to an estimated 20,000 people in Maine. SoMePride is happy to provide support to Augusta Pride, Bangor Pride and Lawrence, Massachusetts Prides. As a 501(c)3 organization Pride plans to continue dynamic visibility and education, soon to be announcing our programs for the coming year.

This year's Pride celebration theme is "The Courage to Be Ourselves". In light of the tragic repeal of the Maine Civil Rights Bill for gays and lesbians on February 10th, the Committee feels that the theme typifies the continuing and astonishing resilience of Maine's lgbt communities. This year we hope to help further the growing feeling of co-operation and optimism that has been the product of that winter defeat and turning point. Maine's lesbian, gay, bi, and transgendered community will shine and celebrate during Pride as an integral part of the greater Portland areas culture and prosperity.

PRIDE HOSTS COMMUNITY RECOGNITION DINNER

Sunday, June 14 • Holiday Inn by the Bay, 88 Spring Street Portland • Cocktails 5 pm, multi-entree buffet dinner starts at 6 pm, Awards 7 pm

Once again Southern Maine Pride will begin it's Pride Week Schedule with a recognition dinner honoring certain people who have helped to enrich the greater Portland community. Joining us will be our special guest Massachusetts State Representative Liz Mallia. Liz was elected to the Massachusetts House from Boston on her first try for public office with over 60% of the vote in a three way race, becoming the first openly gay/lesbian Massachusetts State Legislator since Elaine Noble, over 20 years ago. As an advocate for gay and lesbian visibility within the Democratic Party for over a decade, Representative Mallia is a living source of first hand civil rights history in one of the nations most progressive states.

In addition to our celebrities, Southern Maine Pride will present the Pride Memorabilia Exhibition. The Exhibit is a walk through the history of origins of Pride and the Portland Community through photos and artifacts of Pride from everywhere, especially in Maine. Dinner reservations may be made by calling 207-879-7323 by June 12. Dinner is $25 per person. RBPA members may attend at $20 per person and Outright sponsorships are available at $18 per person.

THIS YEAR'S COMMUNITY SERVICE AWARDS GO TO THE FOLLOWING:

- SARAH HOLMES: Sarah is a graduate student at the University of Southern Maine. For many years she has been organizing and educating on behalf of lgbt students. She initiated USM's "Safe Zones" program.
- MICHAEL QUINT State Representative: Michael has been one of the most outspoken advocates for gay rights among Maine Legislators. The Speaker of the House, Elizabeth Mitchell calls him "one of our most capable policy makers and a true advocate for his constituents."
- SARAH GOODYEAR, Editor Casco Bay Weekly: Sarah's influence on the weekly editions of CBW have helped to provide a frank and mainstream outlet for lgbt issues, information and history.
- KAREN GERAGHTY: As a Portland City Councilor, lobbyist for gay rights legislation, well known spokesperson for Maine's lgbt community and for her work against several homophobic referendum in Maine, Karen will be given a long needed and deserved thank you.
- THE RAINBOW BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL ASSOCIATION: Rainbow has been quietly building a network of mutually supporting business associations within the lgbt community. With membership into the hundreds Rainbow is providing a growing means for our community businesses to prosper.
- PAUL FULLER: Paul led one of the most well organized and positive events during the past referendum through his walk across Maine. His courage provided many the opportunity to feel connected to the "Vote No on 1" campaign.

LUCIE BLUE TREMBLAY

"If You've Ever Loved: A Concert for Pride" Saturday June 20, 8 pm State Street Church

As PRIDE'S 2nd Annual Saturday Night Concert, we are thrilled to be presenting this exceptional singer-songwriter. A magic maker in both the U.S. and Canada since her self-titled album in 1986, Lucie Blue uses the power of her romantic balladry, the charm of her very personal, self-accompanied performance, and her passion for her bilingual heritage to weave a spell. And the magic works because Lucie Blue comes to her audience as a powerful truth teller, whose gift is to share her own honest human experience through her music. Along with a variety of her other songs, Lucie Blue will be performing music from her new CD "I'm Ready," a collection of new works many of which speak directly to the gay and lesbian experience and heart. A Concert for Pride's theme, "If You've Ever Loved..." is taken from a moving song from Lucie's latest. The song tells of a young gay man's struggles to gain acceptance from his extremely religious parents. Lucie sings: "You think God speaks only to you. Well God speaks to me too. And love can set us free. Love can bring us all home. Love needs friends and family. Love does not thrive alone. And if you listen with your heart you'll understand... If you've ever loved a woman, if you've ever loved a man."

Produced for Southern Maine PRIDE, by Richard Lawlor (he's recently presented Suzanne Westernhoefer, Kate Clinton, Bob Smith, Lea Delaria, Odette, Cris Williamson and Tret Fure in concert with Women in Harmony and ML/GPA's Great Pumpkin Ball) this promises to be the concert event of the summer!

ED KARYOSKI, JR.

PRIDE Festival, Saturday June 20, Deering Oaks
Ed has worked in various aspects of the entertainment industry for over twenty years. In the mid-1970's, he was among the first artists to perform theater at Boston Center for the Arts. Soon after moving to New York City he appeared in roles on As the World Turns and Search for Tomorrow. In the 80's Karvoski relocated in Los Angeles, appearing on shows such as Fantasy Island and Facts of Life. Ed is the author of the best seller, A Funny Time to be Gay and will be signing copies of his new book, What's Your Gay and Lesbian Entertainment L.O.?? in between his emcee duties for the Pride Festival.

man of the cloth. Produced by Portland's own, Bob Poirer, Tangible Fathers - three years in the making - is his first independent film. A must-see Pride event!

BOB POIRER'S TANGIBLE FATHERS

Thursday, June 18 Keystone Cafe 504 Congress Street 3 showings 6, 8 and 10 pm $5

Reaching through layers of isolation and fear, "Matthew," a Roman Catholic Priest, reared in rural Maine, struggles to grasp a hold of his sexual identity and his less than fulfilling interpersonal relationships. Tangible Fathers explores his life from the birth of his spirituality in his pre-teen years, through the discovery of his sexuality in his early adulthood, to his present day struggle with accepting his sexual identity in the light of his role as a

JEAN MEIKE & BAND

PRIDE Festival, Saturday June 20, Deering Oaks

A prolific song writer from Rogue Bluffs, Maine, Jean Meike has two CD's of original music in production. Meike began her singing career in church as a toddler, singing gospel harmony through New England. She has played for six years in an all women band, now a soloist. Her CD "Dance on Fire" features Jean's full-bodied soulful, alto voice, while her music is about growth, healing and spiritual connections with others.

MAINE GAY MEN'S CHORUS

Pridelights Concert, Wednesday June 17 Congress Square
Proud and Out Loud, Friday and Saturday June 19 and 20 8 pm
Portland High School Auditorium

The Maine Gay Men's Chorus, under the direction of Ed Reichert, will be making a special guest appearance as part of the Pridelights concert in Congress Square. They'll be giving a sneak preview of their sixth annual Pride Concert to be presented Friday and Saturday of PRIDE weekend. Proud and Out Loud! is a celebration of music and pride. The focus is on the future and MGMCM promises a multidimensional show with "lots of surprises," including some zany "choralography" under the direction of Kyle Tardy. Featured will be a Rita Kissen world premiere and a new arrangement of Tom Brown's heartwrenching ballad, "Jonathan Wesley Oliver, Jr." Other musical selections include a salute to the 60's, a set of stirring spirituals and selections from Rent, Ragtime and When Pigs Fly.

MONA RAE & DASHBOARD MAGELLAN

PRIDE Festival, Saturday June 20, Deering Oaks

Mona Rae has been described as "a sexy cross between Melissa Etheridge and Mary-Chapin Carpenter." The band, Dashboard Magellan, evolved through a series of events as Mona Rae's solo career expanded.

Performing throughout Maine, as different backup band members sat with her from time to time, a talented core gathered as friends and musicians. Joining Mona on keyboards, mandolin, electric or acoustic bass and while adding their own strong vocal harmonies will be Kevin Bates, Bill Thibodeau and Nancy Merrill.

ANNI CLARK

"If You've Ever Loved: A Concert for Pride" Saturday June 20, 8 pm State Street Church

Since 1981, Anni Clark has shared stages from her home state of Maine to Texas with the likes of Shawn Colvin, Patty Larkin, Leo Kottke, Cheryl Wheeler, John Gorka, Leon Russell - to name a few. The songs have been played regularly on radio stations throughout the Eastern States, the southwest and Canada. She has twice been selected from among hundreds of artists to perform at the prestigious Kerrville (Texas) Folk Festival as one of the select group on NewFolk Emerging Songwriters. Year after year, Anni's name appears at or near the top of newspaper's polls in Maine and New Hampshire as one of the area's favorite female performers. Saturday, June 20 as Anni joins Lucie Blue Tremblay for "A Concert for PRIDE," you'll find out why!

DAVID HALL

PRIDE Festival, Saturday June 20, Deering Oaks

Gay and very out, Dave's music is formed by the perspective of his sexual identity without being defined by it. Dave is an East Village (NYC) club troubadour with his first CD "Playing the Man" making waves, spotlighting one of only a few gay male recording artists getting national attention. A folk rocker the caliber of Paul Simon and John Lennon, Hall's stylistically varied repertoire has poetic storytelling as the unifying factor. As Andrew Velez of OLT Magazine describes it, Dave's writing is "all aglow with the sweetness of ordinary experience."

DIVA BRAZILIA

Pridelights Concert, Wednesday June 17 Congress Square

An ensemble of women performing world music, three strong vocalists blend their talent with incredible jazzy flute, guitars and colorful percussion, delivering the sounds of Brazil, Samba and Bossa along with Swing, Blues and Jazz. Great rhythm, harmony, and high energy, their innovative sound is refreshing whether doing original music or standards in English or Portuguese. The members are Dianna Hansen, Rebecca Humphrey, Marta Lane, Georgie Nichols and Bridget Spaeth. They are a captivating, local treasure!

BACK COVE FAMILY DAY

Thanks to cloning, researchers predict that by the year 2050, single-parent families will be replaced with multi-single-parent families – which means kids may have as many as 12-15 mothers or fathers. Families of the present can get some sun and some of that prized quality time at the Back Cove Family Day. Kids and their parents can choose from a host of activities, from in-line skating demonstrations and a basketball "hot shot" contest to line dancing and pony rides, all set to the music of Lynn Deever, the Dan Merrill Band and others. Along Baxter Boulevard and in Payson Park, Portland, from 11 a.m.-4 p.m. Free (some activities have a nominal fee). For a full list of events, call 874-8793.

"FAT, FAT JEHOSEPHAT"

If philologists are correct, the term "dieting" will be replaced in the next millennium with the word "tick-a-dilly." In the old days, of course, it was called fasting, one of two methods King Jehosephat of Judah used to prepare for an attack on his kingdom. The other was good old-fashioned prayer. "Fat, Fat Jehosephat," presented by the Children's Choir of the Galilee Baptist Church in Gorham, tells the story of the corpulent king's weight loss – and the power of faith when all odds are against you. At the Galilee Baptist Church, 317 Main St., Gorham, at 6 p.m. Free. 839-6985.

"REAL LIFE SONGS"

Parents can especially look forward to the next millennium, when musicologists believe rock 'n' roll will be phased out and teenagers will prefer to listen to good, sound advice. For the time being, there's "Real Life Songs," featuring Dar Williams, Richard Thompson and Bruce Cockburn. Determined to shed the hype around concerts, the three folk musicians offer up an evening of simple, down-to-earth performances that focus on the music, the lyrics and the artists. And here we thought they'd have inflatable pigs hovering over the crowd. At Merrill Auditorium, 20 Myrtle St., Portland, at 7:30 p.m. Tix: $30-$35.50 842-0800.

Tuning into reality: Dar Williams performs at "Real Life Songs," June 17.

Devil and angel

Two views of the American Way

■ JASON WILKINS

It's a wonder that the denizens of the religious right did not descend upon Portland to condemn both plays that opened in the area last weekend—one of which is billed as a "gay fantasia on national themes," while the other has a naughty word in the very title. Shocking!

Before moving on to Anita Bryant's worst nightmare, let's consider "Damn Yankees," now hoofin' and grinnin' up a storm at the Portland Players. The plot of this classic musical crosses "Faust" with box scores and Norman Rockwell.

Once upon a sofa in America, a faithful and frustrated baseball fan named Joe Boyd (the sweet-voiced Norman Whiteside) watches his team lose yet again to the cursed New York Yankees. The aged Mr. Boyd muses aloud that he would give just about anything to see his beloved Washington Senators win the pennant. Poof! In a cloud of smoke appears a slick bald character with a pointy goatee, a wicked grin, and a habit of lighting his cigarettes with no visible source of flame. He calls himself Applegate, but could it be — SATAN??

A bargain is proposed: Applegate will transform Boyd into a slugging star for the Senators and ensure a pennant, and ask only Boyd's soul in return. Boyd agrees, on the condition that should he wish to drop the deal before the last day of the season, he gets to escape the fiery pit. Wham! One brimstone flash later, old Joe Boyd becomes young Joe Hardy (the big-voiced Martin Lescant) and the Senators start winning.

Applegate has just one problem: Joe soon begins to miss his wife (Stella Baumann) and entertain second thoughts. Enter Lola, the sexiest seductress in the underworld (played with wit and sass by the leggy Kim Liggett). Satan's little helper shakes her assets in "Whatever Lola Wants," but Joe remains true to his old sweetheart — at which point Lola falls for him, of course. Still, Applegate has lots of other tricks. Will Joe somehow be able to win the pennant and his soul? (Come to think of it, fundamentalists must love this play, in which women with sex appeal are literally tools of Lucifer, while a housewife whose husband abandons her to play fungo with the devil remains doggedly devoted.)

"Damn Yankees" is cotton candy for the eyes and ears — light on the nutrition, but who cares? The vivid colors of the costumes, and the cleverness of Patrick Dullea's production design, set the tone. It's all bright and sweet without becoming insipid.

The songs are, of course, wonderful. If you like "(You Gotta Have) Heart," rejoice, for you will hear it no fewer than four times. The ensemble of ballplayers has a great group moment with "The Game," in which they forswear women and booze for the sake of the team — with a few exceptions. And as Applegate, John Olore just about turns the evening into his own personal showcase with his big number "The Good Old Days."

Cannily sponsored by the Portland Sea Dogs, this show can actually make a fan feel romantic about baseball again — no small feat.

Millennium fever

Mad Horse Theatre Company shows real guts by attempting "Angels in America" at Oak Street Theatre. Not only is the play epic in length and ambition, it also requires many changes of setting and special effects that are difficult to pull off in a small black-box space like Oak Street.

Even with these obstacles, the company manages to give "Millennium Approaches," the first part of Tony Kushner's double Pulitzer Prize-winner, an emotionally powerful staging.

Plot synopsis does little to convey the force of the play, but here's an outline: In New York, two couples are facing trouble. When Prior Walter (J.D. Merritt) learns he is dying of AIDS, his lover, Louis (Craig Houk), can't handle the news and wants to move out. Both men are miserable — one with guilt, the other with betrayal. In horrible pain, Prior begins to see visions and hear voices. Is it just the medication talking?

Harper (the fragile, yet funny, Renee St. Jean) knows all about medications and hallucinations. This Mormon housewife pops Valium all day to dull the pain of her sham marriage to Joe Pitt, a closeted homosexual. Joe (Guy Durichek) is a lawyer employed by a more famously closeted homosexual and red-baiter Roy Cohn (Michael Howard), who wants Joe to work in Washington as his corrupt underling.

"Angels in America" has been called the best American play in decades, and it's certainly the most ambitious. Interweaving his plots, taking on the largest of themes, mixing terror and sarcastic wit, giving his characters fine arias full of passion and politics and poetry, Kushner manages not just to define the entire era of the 1980s, but to create a vital myth of American destiny tumbling toward the millennium. In this play, it's not only the HIV-infected who are sick, but the whole nation. When an angel rises over the stage, you believe in it, and believe it is needed.

With a couple of exceptions, Mad Horse's cast rises to the material. J.D.

Merritt has the best and most central role — the most humorous and dramatic — and he nails it. When celestial lights disturb his pained sleep, he cries: "Very Steven Spielberg!" The whole company shines during the masterful overlapping tableaux, when two scenes unfold at once. In one, Louis tells Prior that he's leaving him. In the other, Joe confesses to Harper that he is attracted to men. Scenes like this are operatic in their complexity and primal emotional kick.

It would be nice if Mad Horse could afford to build a more colorful and lavish set to accompany its dramatic skills. But when given ambrosia, one does not complain that there is no garnish.

"Angels in America" is a must-see, the drama of the era performed by the city's best ensemble. Next year, Mad Horse plans to present the second half of the epic, "Perestroika," just in time for the new millennium. Even fundamentalists would be foolish to deny themselves such rapture.

JIM PINFOLD

1 In its fourth visit to Portland, the Willem Breuker Kollektief once again reminded the audience how slippery musical perceptions can be. The band's very European take on jazz is difficult to translate for American ears. Is it avant or is it skewering the sacred cow? Can the group's swing swing, or does it do the hippo walk on purpose? If the audience members miss the sly winks and nods from the band, do they miss the point? If the Kollektief rearranges our preconceived notions of music, what more can we ask?

The Kollektief in full flower: A

2 Brian Wilson, Randy Newman and Van Dyke Parks have always been tethered to the same pop-music pole, just at different distances. Newman is the consummate songwriter who has carried on the traditions of the 1930s and '40s, but with a slightly skewed vision. Wilson brilliantly dumbed it down, allowing access to barely literate 13-year-old blondes. Parks is a still smarter version of those two, and he embellishes the surface of the song with sequins and 16-inch sparklers. Thus it is interesting that Newman resides in the recesses of our consciousness, Wilson resides only in some tragic fiction of his own devising, and nobody's heard of Parks. This will likely change due to Rufus Wainwright's new self-titled CD, which is so infused by Parksian sensibilities (as well as Parks' production of two tracks) that his vision will be all but impossible to sidestep. Wainwright is already garnering a lot of attention because of his parents (Loudon III plus one half of the McGarrigle sisters), but Parks' influence will make this exquisite album one of the year's picks.

3 Take text. Sprinkle with more than 50 composers' digitally manipulated contributions. Surprisingly, you come out with an intriguing whole. The Frog Peak Collaborations Project. Two CDs of bizarre world charm.

4 Amid the unending tributes to the finally dead Frank Sinatra were the deeply touching (Gary Giddins), the artful (Wilfred Sheed) and the screwy. On May 17, Stephen Holden, writing in "Critics' Notebook" in the New York Times, worried at length about which Sinatra will be remembered by the masses: the perfect singer or thuggish Rat Pack leader. Holden decried the loss of training grounds for the art of intimate song and fretted over what he saw as a post-modernist curse: "Tis better to be cool than to be real." After a career as an unusually lucid writer, Holden is showing the initial signs of crotchety old fartism. He apparently confuses the ironic sensibility that fuels the current adulation of the Burt Bacharachs, Fat Elvises and Tom Joneses with the genuine respect for artists like Ella, Tony and Frank. Though Sinatra died with kitsch schtick intact, his voice was far more immediate than the ironic crowd would care to tangle with. The Rat Pack was a joke like Mothra and bellbottoms, period pieces that make us giddy. But there is no time frame on Sinatra's singing. Holden should worry less.

5 "X-Files" is difficult to watch. The plots are filo-thin, and, despite the myriad layers, don't add up to much. Agent Mulder's eyes deserve pennies on the lids. Scully's little red Cheerio of a mouth is so static, it's shocking to see her eat. But the sets and lighting design are sumptuous, and the barely audible soundtrack is better than that of any other network series. On one recent episode, Mulder walked the halls of yet another federal building full of clean, bright, businesslike offices, looking for entry into a room, any room. The music was quietly ominous, whispering, "Don't go in." He did, finding row upon row of cadavers. His eyelids didn't move, but the music alone made my heart blink. Twice.

7 As teenagers in Topsfield, Mass., my friends and I would sometimes crawl through a large field at dusk to watch male woodcocks engage in their mating rituals. The robin-sized birds would fly sweeping cone-shaped patterns in the sky, and, upon reaching the apex, plummet to the ground, very close to their point of departure. Hiding in the grass a hundred yards away, listening to the mechanical "zeep" of their call, we'd then rush across the fields to their territory as soon as they took off again. In the twilight, we'd lie on our backs awaiting their descent. The memory of that time 30 years ago returned as I drove south in Baxter State Park in mid-May, and a woodcock, sitting in the gravel, stopped my car short. They are patient birds until you walk too close. Then they disappear. Maybe for years. www

Review

You can't really call the beginning of "Tangible Fathers" an opening scene any more than you can say the film as a whole is a conventional documentary. "Tangible Fathers," the debut from local gay filmmaker and Biddeford native Bob Poirier, is the story of "Matthew," a former Roman Catholic priest who was already in seminary school when he began exploring his attraction to men. "At first I was really excited about doing the project," Matthew says at the film's opening. "But then the possibility of discrimination, of harassment, of being fired..." Instead of pictures of Matthew, whose voice delivers an introspective, memoir-style narration, we are shown visually evocative images and nostalgic footage corresponding to the story at hand. Poirier uses moody colors to create atmosphere in the various stills of swimming pools, stark factory-town landscapes and Super-8 shots of kids playing. And though we are quite far into the film before we have a handle on who our narrator is and why his story is important, the story is engaging enough to carry the viewer.

Matthew's calm, affectless voice hints at a benevolent person trapped inside a world that doesn't give him room to breathe. As a child he suffered an accident that left his eyesight damaged and spoiled his chances of becoming an athlete. One of seven kids in a small-town family, he turned to the church for the attention he couldn't get at home. His father — tired and overworked from his efforts to keep the family fed and sheltered — was emotionally absent. "To make things run smoothly, you had to make sure that Mom and Dad were not upset," Matthew says ruefully. A sophomore in high school when he started his path toward the priesthood, Matthew tells us he was "very naive and very young." Too young to realize that he would not want to give up sex for the priesthood and too naive to see what a prison the church

a documentary film by Bob Poirier

What's next for Poirier on the filmmaking front? He's writing the story for a Maine-specific feature on the struggle between love and career, with a civil-rights-oriented setting — probably based on our local gay-rights travails. "I'd like to tell Maine's story," says Poirier, "to put it out there for the country to see."

ZOE S. MILLER

"Tangible Fathers," directed by Bob Poirier. Not rated. Premieres June 18 at Keystone Theatre Cafe, 504 Congress St., Portland, at 6, 8 and 10 p.m. 871-5500.

would be for a homosexual. Reflecting on his turbulent time in the church, and his ultimate expulsion, Matthew says, "Better to bend the rules than to alienate people. If the religion doesn't serve the people, it becomes self-serving. Christ himself came to teach us that those on the outside fit. How can I love myself when the church says that I'm intrinsically evil?"

"Tangible Fathers" was never intended to be an anonymous documentary. Poirier began with an idea of doing a fictional narrative on gay closeted men who were married. But when his research led him to the church, he met Matthew and decided to tell the priest's real-life story. "I just wanted to present him as him," Poirier says. But Matthew changed his mind a year into filming. "It threw me," says Poirier. "I thought, 'How do I tell this story without revealing him?' But his not wanting to reveal his identity is key." It makes the impact of the film stronger to know that even though Matthew has been in therapy for several years and seems to be gaining ground on his despair, he still feels unsafe revealing his identity.

Does Matthew's story hit home for Poirier, a Catholic reared in socially conservative Biddeford? "It's a story about struggling with Catholicism," says Poirier. "But not just for priests. It was the perfect symbol of what I've gone through." Accepting himself as a gay man, he says, transfers to other areas beside sexuality — like having the confidence to make films.

NEW THIS WEEK
BANANAS There's something perversely comical about "Four Days in September" and "Bananas" being shown in the same week. In this philosophical comedy, a product tester (Woody Allen) falls in with a group of revolutionaries in a small Latin American country, eventually becoming their leader. Howard Cosell calls the action. Keystone Theatre Cafe
CAN'T HARDLY WAIT A decade ago, films like this one built a little empire called Cinema — the premiere source for movies about teens, sex, drinking and drugs. Boy, coming of age was fun in those days. In "Can't Hardly Wait," the class of '98 celebrates its liberation from high school with... come to think of it, nothing's really changed.

HOYS CLARK'S POND, HOYS FALMOUTH 10 CHINESE BOX On the eve of Hong Kong's return to Chinese rule, a dying British journalist (Jeremy Irons) falls in love with a beautiful woman (Song Li) with a shady past. Is there supposed to be a metaphor in there somewhere? Directed by Wayne Wang. Keystone Theatre Cafe
DIRTY WORK Bob Saget, who firmly established himself as El Dorado Supremo with his role on TV's "Full House," directed this slice of juvenile fantasy about a revenge-for-his service. With Norm Macdonald and Chevy Chase. Hoys Clark's Pond, Hoys Falmouth 10

FOUR DAYS IN SEPTEMBER In the summer of 1969 in Rio, an idealistic journalist joins the October 8 Revolution, a band of guerrillas dedicated to toppling Brazil's military dictatorship. He soon learns the revolutionaries are nothing more than terrorists, and when it comes time to eliminate the U.S. ambassador they've kidnapped, the journalist must choose between the cause — and his own humanity. With Alan Arkin. The Movies
SIX DAYS, SEVEN NIGHTS If you could be stranded on a tropical island with anyone you choose, who would it be? Yeah, yeah — besides yourself. In Ivan Reitman's romantic adventure, a cargo pilot (Harrison Ford) finds himself saddled with a prima donna (Anne Heche) after their plane crash lands on a deserted island. Maine Mall Cinema, Hoys Falmouth 10

TANGIBLE FATHERS Portland filmmaker Bob Poirier directed this documentary about Matthew, a Catholic priest reared in rural Maine who struggles to grasp a hold of his sexual identity and interpersonal relationships. Reviewed this issue. Keystone Theatre Cafe

ALSO SHOWING
THE BIG LEBOWSKI The Coen brothers ("Fargo," "Raising Arizona") take another refracted look at middle America with this story of a dippy bowler (Jeff Bridges) who is kidnapped after being mistaken for a high roller behind on his debts. Also with John Goodman. Nickelodeon
BULWORTH The idea of a stiff debauched liberal of a white politician (Warren Beatty) turning into a homebody seems so embarrassing and offensive that it couldn't possibly work. But somehow, Beatty's racial and political parody harnesses the goofy power of its leading character to a smart and witty message, taking the most despicable elements of mainstream politics, juxtaposing them with the rankest aspects of African-American culture and wrapping them tightly inside a comedy, while never descending to the level of caricature. Reviewed 6/4/98. Maine Mall Cinema, Hoys Falmouth 10

CHARACTER The illegitimate son of cold-hearted bailiff and a detached mother strives to succeed at his law firm while grappling with the dominating, ruthless presence of his father. When the older man turns up dead, the boy becomes the prime suspect. Directed by Mike Van Diem. The Movies
DEEP IMPACT To this day, it's still unclear what's more terrifying about the '70s schlock disaster pic "Earthquake," the disaster itself or having to watch Lorne Greene perform heroics. What is clear is that, these days, a disaster has to threaten to obliterate a whole city, not just shake it up. Or, in the case of "Deep Impact," obliterate the world. Robert Duvall and Morgan Freeman lead this terror-from-the-heavens boggle about a comet headed for Earth. Reviewed this issue. Hoys Clark's Pond

FEAR AND LOATHING IN LAS VEGAS Terry Gilliam ("Brazil") directed this movie version of Hunter S. Thompson's autobiographical novel about the drug-warped mishaps — some of them unsettling — he encountered while covering a narcotics-enforcement convention in Las Vegas. Nickelodeon
GODZILLA He's mean and he's green. The terror from the South Pacific rises again, this time skipping Tokyo the city's been razed enough for the concrete jungle of the Big Apple. The only people who won't get a kick out of the major-league mayhem are those with chronic impairment of the enjoyment glands. Reviewed 5/28/98. Hoys Clark's Pond, Hoys Falmouth 10

GOOD WILL HUNTING When one therapist after another gives up on the brilliant but troubled Will Hunting (Matt Damon), he's finally handed over to a shrink at the community college (Robin Williams). The doc may not have a

Cambridge address, but he has what all the others didn't: patience. Reviewed 1/15/98. Keystone Theatre Cafe
HOPE FLOATS Sandra Bullock is a former high school princess who leaves her cheating husband and returns to her sleepy hometown. For the local stud (Harry Connick Jr.) who's always loved her but never had the courage to say so, it's a second chance at realizing his dream: to marry her and get a part in one of them "Speed" movies. Hoys Clark's Pond, Hoys Falmouth 10

THE HORSE WHISPERER Even though it's not uncommon for horses to whisper "you stupid boob" each time you turn your back on them, this equestrian epic has less to do with our four-legged friends than with the remarkable healing powers of T.C. Robert Redford stars as a dewy, soft-shouldered cowboy who tames feral ponies — and the hearts of coltish women much, much too young for him. Hoys Clark's Pond, Hoys Falmouth 10

LES MISÉRABLES Don't blame Victor Hugo if a movie about an innocent man relentlessly pursued by a cop sounds familiar. The French author's sweeping historical novel had dubs on the persecuted-saint premise 130 years before "The Fugitive." The movie itself is top heavy, concentrating all its effort into the first hour and letting the second go to waste. The climactic battle scenes are a particular dud. Geoffrey Rush, however, is fantastic as the icepick Javert. Each time he appears on screen, the temperature in the theater drops 10 degrees. With Liam Neeson, Claire Danes and Uma Thurman. Reviewed 5/7/98. Nickelodeon

THE OBJECT OF MY AFFECTION He's just been dumped and needs a room. She needs a roommate. He's gay. She has a boyfriend. But they're just friends — right? Bearing obvious parallels to "Chasing Amy," this comedy from Nicholas Hytner ("The Madness of King George") tries to find the line that separates hetero from homosexuality. Maybe, along the way, we'll also find the line that separates chic exploitation from conscientious dialogue. But let's hope not, or we can forget studied art house epics like "Mandragora." With Jennifer Aniston and Paul Rudd. Reviewed 4/23/98. Nickelodeon

PAULIE DreamWorks obviously raked in a bundle from its other animal-outwits-man film, "Mousetrap," or they probably wouldn't have green-lighted this film about a talking parrot. Nickelodeon
A PERFECT MURDER Michael Douglas — who holds the record for appearing in the most cinematic thrillers about a guy with female trouble — plays a husband who hires his wife's lover to rub out the unfaithful femme. With Gwyneth Paltrow. Maine Mall Cinema

QUEST FOR CAMELOT After he's accidentally blinded, King Arthur's stable boy runs off to the woods where he learns to survive by his instincts. An encounter with a beautiful maiden prompts him to return to court and fight for his rightful position at the round table. Meanwhile, he's sure to charm your pants off by finding any old reason to break out into song. "Oh, I'm on my way to gettin' a little blood lettin' there's nothin' quite as peachy as a little leechy leechy/Ah, ho, ho!" Hoys Falmouth 10

SLIDING DOORS A woman is fired, an occurrence that sets off two divergent realities. In one, she catches an early train, and arrives home only to discover her boyfriend in bed with another woman. In the other, she misses the train, and ends up leading a life of dull servitude. Got that? Nickelodeon
THE SPANISH PRISONER You can't trust David Mamet. He stands there shuffling his cards, and when he holds one up and asks you to memorize it, you're secretly watching to see what his other hand is doing. Just when you figure out exactly how the trick is done, you stand up to leave and realize he's tied your shoelaces together. So go ahead, take another crack at him with "The Spanish Prisoner." The false-bottomed plot involves a naive company man who may be a con, who may be being conned, or who may just be the bait for a con job. Who the hell knows? With Campbell Scott and Steve Martin. Keystone Theatre Cafe

TITANIC With a script that's entertaining but not refreshing, Cameron scuttles the allegorical possibilities of the Titanic and instead launches a shallow romance between Jack Dawson (DiCaprio) and Rose De Wit Bukator (Winslet). All the same, when the ship finally goes down, it does so with fitting spectacle and grandeur. Reviewed 1/1/98. Keystone Theatre Cafe
THE TRUMAN SHOW Thanks to the restoration of some archival footage, viewers can now see episodes of the short-lived variety show starring Truman Capote and Harry S. Truman. In the pilot episode, featuring special guest stars the Clutter family — wait, that's the "The Truman and Truman Laff Hour." In a bundle from its other animal-outwits-man film, "Mousetrap," or they probably wouldn't have green-lighted this film about a talking parrot. Nickelodeon

THE WEDDING SINGER Adam Sandler stars as a musician on the rebound in this homage to '80s pop. With Drew Barrymore. Nickelodeon

This course runs eight weeks and is taught on consecutive Tuesdays. Fee: $175.

Drawing From the Soul

with Helen B. Warren, M.S., M.F.A.

As women did in ancient times, we come together in circle to nurture our gifts of creativity and intuition. Through the profound process of "Touch Drawing", we journey inward to listen to and embrace our deepest selves. Placing paper on an inked plate, we allow our hands to move over the surface, surrendering to the Creative Force guiding us. Our hands are no longer "instruments of the mind, but organic extensions of the soul." Together we create ritual to support and integrate this process and to provide a context in which to remember our union with our deepest selves, with each other and with Earth and Universal Energies. Introductory Evening, Thursday June 25th, 6:30-9:30pm. Fee: $35 includes supplies. Saturday, June 27th 10am-4pm. Fee: $75 includes supplies.

THIS MODERN WORLD

by TOM TOMORROW

The guns taken from accused shooter Kip Kinkel were a .22 caliber Ruger semiautomatic rifle and two semiautomatic pistols a 9mm Glock and a .22 Ruger. Such guns were not included in the 1994 federal ban on assault weapons. Lawmakers concluded that a .22 isn't powerful enough to do significant damage. — Associated Press

"Springfield's tragedy is only the latest in an appalling spate of school-related shootings in recent months. Since Oct. 1, when a distraught 16-year-old allegedly shot nine fellow students in Pearl, Miss., 14 people have been killed and 26 have been wounded in eight separate incidents, including the playground massacre in Jonesboro, Ark. on March 24." — Newsweek

"When I snip, I want the freepower to kill people!" — Kip Kinkel to high school friend

"It's important not to make guns the issue!" — Robert Fyker, father of wounded student Jake Fyker and staunch N.R.A. supporter

I just like guns — Kinkel to Springfield police after being detained for possession of a stolen pistol the day before the shooting
